

This is a turtle, whose back is hand painted and decorated with eggshell. By this gift, the Office of the Chief Coroner acknowledges that all of us live on the turtle's back; we walk together here, and treat each other with respect. The eggshell represents the strength, and the fragility of First Nations children who entered the residential school system, never to leave. By this gift, we acknowledge the troubled past we share, and express our hope for the better future we are working to build together.

This is a turtle, whose back is hand painted and decorated with eggshell. By this gift, the Office of the Chief Coroner acknowledges that all of us live on the turtle's back; we walk together here, and treat each other with respect. The eggshell represents the strength, and the fragility of First Nations children who entered the residential school system, never to leave. By this gift, we acknowledge the troubled past we share, and express our hope for the better future we are working to build together.