PATHOLOGY REPORT

Patient Victor Sugar

Doctor A.B. Simes

Hospital wort Ou'appelle

HISTORY

Age of patient 16 years

Situation of growth Heart, pericardium, lung

LABORATORY FINDINGS

The whole condition present is tubercular. There is a tubercular nodule, about the size of a filbert, in the apex of the lung, and some smaller nodules, about the size of grains of shot.

The heart, with the pericardium, is enormously enlarged, and when filled with fluid must have been the size of a football. The surface of the heart is covered with a layer of tubercular tissue, and the lining of the pericardial sac also shows a layer of tubercular tissue. Sections of this tissue are typically tubercular, and many tubercle bacilli were found in stained smears. Around the trachea and its bifurcation, and the large vessels, are many tubercular glands.

The pleura also shows a tubercular exudate.

I have never before seen a heart and pericardium so markedly involved as this specimen.
